REASONS FOR ALLOWANCE

1. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance:

The instant invention is distinguished over the prior art of record by providing a system and process for detecting pinholes in a an active substrate requiring the combination including an electrode covered with an insulating layer, a reversed polarity electrode plate, chemical solution confining means for confining the chemical solution to a specified region of the substrate, and chemical solution supplying and discharging means for supplying and discharging the chemical solution to and from the substrate. In another embodiment (claim 12), the process requires a frame-shaped container having a flexible sealing material around the open of one end. The prior art of record neither teaches nor suggests the combination of elements recited in the instant claims.

Wood discloses an apparatus and method for detecting pinholes in a substrate comprising chemical solution confining means for confining the chemical solution to a specified location (see US '795 at Figures 2 and 4). However, unlike the instant invention, the apparatus and process disclosed by Wood relies upon capillary action to confine the chemical solution. Capillary action requires small amounts of liquid and closely spaced features. In addition, capillary action would not work with the claimed supply and discharge means because such means would more than likely overcome the capillary forces required to control and confine the liquid solution. Regarding the embodiment recited in claim 12, the confinement means disclosed by Wood do not have sealing material because they do physically contact the substrate. Since it would not be possible to use a supplying and discharging means in the apparatus of Wood, one skilled in the art would not have been motivated to make such a modification. Similarly, a frame-shaped container with a flexible sealing material around the opening would defeat Wood's intended use of the apparatus by preventing confinement by capillary action.

Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled "Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance."
